

ABSTRACT

IP routes are established between route processors. The route processors change message addresses, so that signaling and data messages between users or between users and a soft switch are routed through the route processors. The route processors transfer data messages
5 over the IP routes and monitor performance of the IP routes. The performance data is provided to a route manager that manages the IP routes to avoid undesirable service quality.